The Dawn of Cat Photography

The advent of photography in the mid-19th century revolutionized the way we documented the world around us, including our beloved pets. With the invention of the daguerreotype in 1839, capturing images became more accessible, and cats, with their captivating personalities and curious nature, quickly became popular subjects.

Early cat photographs were often staged and posed, with cats dressed in elaborate costumes or posed in unnatural positions. However, as photography evolved, so too did the way cats were portrayed.

Photographers began to capture more candid and natural moments, revealing the true personalities and charm of these enigmatic creatures.

A Window into the Past

The photographs in Catographics offer a fascinating window into the past, allowing us to observe the lives and relationships between cats and their human owners. We see cats lounging in the laps of society ladies, frolicking in gardens, and even posing proudly in front of the camera. These images provide a glimpse into the history of cat ownership, fashion, and the changing attitudes towards pets in the Victorian and Edwardian eras.

Masterful Photography and Intriguing Captions

Catographics is not just a collection of vintage photographs; it is a work of art. The photographs have been meticulously curated and restored, bringing out the richness and detail of each image. Author Susan Herbert provides informative and engaging captions that accompany each photograph, giving context to the scene and sharing historical anecdotes about the cats and their owners.

Herbert's writing style is both informative and captivating, drawing readers into the world of these vintage cats. She weaves together historical facts, personal stories, and her own insights into the nature of cats, creating a narrative that is both educational and entertaining.
